

AARON WILL MOVE HIS FAMILY HERE

Henry Aaron has revealed he will move his family to Atlanta during the playing season when the Braves transfer here in 1966.

Milwaukee writers had quoted Aaron as saying he would not move his family to Atlanta because of possible problems of discrimination.

"We visited in many of the residential sections of the city ... and both my wife and I were awfully impressed. We saw some truly lovely homes down here.

"IF I don't move my family down here, I might as well join the Army or something," said Aaron. "I wouldn't get to be with them (family) either. Sure we'll move."

Aaron was in town over the weekend to receive the Two Friends Award, along with Ed Mathews, from the 100 Percent Wrong Club. He made a new friend with the city he will soon call home.

"I'll say what I said earlier," commented Aaron. "I said it will be hard to leave Milwaukee where all our close friends are, but I never said I wouldn't move to Atlanta. That's just one of the many stories some writers have twisted.

"IF I were to come on to Atlanta and leave my family in Milwaukee during the season, it would be 10 to maybe 11 months before I'd get to see them. I am definitely not going to do that."

Aaron, who talked real estate while here, said, "My wife and I will be back, maybe not before the start of this season, but we will be back and looking."
